Neighborhood Background

How Woodinville grew from a river homestead into a city, plus landmarks and geography.

FROM RIVER HOMESTEAD TO CITY

Woodinville's Story

The property sits within the City of Woodinville, in north King County, just south of NE 205th St. The city grew along the Sammamish River and takes its name from Ira and Susan Woodin, who homesteaded there in 1871.

1871	Ira and Susan Woodin settle a 160-acre homestead beside Squak Slough, today's Sammamish River. Their home later serves as the community's first school and first church.
1876	The first steamboat, the Mud Hen, runs on the slough. Boats link the valley to Lake Washington until the lake is lowered in 1916.
1881	A post office opens with Susan Woodin as postmaster, giving the settlement its name: Woodinville.
1887–88	The Seattle, Lake Shore & Eastern Railway reaches Woodinville.
1912	Frederick Stimson funds the brick Hollywood Schoolhouse near his Hollywood Farm.
1925	John DeYoung buys the town's general store and soon forms the Woodinville Mercantile Company.
1964–65	A river project straightens the Sammamish, leaving it about half its original length.
1976	Chateau Ste. Michelle opens its Woodinville winery.
1993	Woodinville incorporates as a city, with Lucy DeYoung as its first mayor.
