

Ten Things Sellers Will Miss Most

907 NE 72nd St | Roosevelt

Green Lake access – Walking to Green Lake in minutes! No need to stress about finding a parking spot, which is especially nice on busy summer days.

Outdoor living – The deck has been our happy place for family dinners, sunset views, and Fourth of July fireworks.

Close to light rail – Getting around Seattle is so easy! Whether it's for commuting or heading to the game or a concert.

Sense of community – Annual neighborhood picnics and community gatherings were a great way to connect with the friendly neighbors and have some fun.

Home with history – Over the years, we've met several past owners and hearing their memories has made us appreciate how much this home means to the neighborhood.

Cozy gathering places – The heated seating by the fireplace has been a favorite spot for holidays, quiet nights, and plenty of family performances we'll never forget.

Everyday comforts – Nothing beats heated bathroom floors, especially in the cold winter mornings!

Space for everyone – With generous room sizes and a flexible layout, there's space for everyone to spread out while still accommodating guests, a home office, hobbies, or study areas.

The kitchen – Truly the heart of the home! Lots of space and the layout naturally brought everyone together and kept the family connected throughout the day.

Unexpected privacy – Elevated from street level, the home actually feels quite private while still being in the hustle and bustle of Seattle.
