WHAT INSPIRES YOU?

Love. As a Broker-In-Charge, I loved & fought hard for my agents. For my clients, I do the same.

RHETT BROWN

The difference is in the details

Rhett Brown knows that these words won't end discrimination in real estate, but people can.

"2020 brought about many challenges & opportunities," she says, "but one in particular hit home to me as both a challenge and an opportunity. The challenge is discrimination; the opportunity is being part of the solution."

Brown saw the National Association of REALTORS' implementation of Bias Training as a way towards that solution.

"Having grown up in Greenville, despite it being a small Southern town, I was brought up to see people as people," she says. "Learning & mentoring are important to me, so when the National Association of REALTORS quickly implemented Implicit Bias Training, standing up for racial equity & more, I jumped in with both feet. I was taken aback by the subtle prejudice that continues to occur, but more importantly, so proud to be part of an organization that has it made it a mission to correct this within the real estate industry."

For Brown, this fight is an extension of her urge to help people.

"I am passionate about giving back to our community & industry," she says. "I serve on the Boards of our local Association, State Association, North Main Community Association, NEXT Schools and serve on the CSPA fundraising committee, as well as the local Diversity Committee."

As you can see, with Brown, it's about more than just real estate.
