MELJAC ■

Meljac was founded in Paris in 1995 by André Bousquet, with the goal of elevating everyday electrical fittings into objects of luxury and design. Rejecting the purely functional look of standard switches and sockets, the brand pioneered the use of solid brass, refined finishes, and artisanal craftsmanship to transform these elements into decorative details worthy of the world's most prestigious interiors. Today, Meljac is internationally recognised and frequently specified in luxury hotels, private residences, cultural landmarks, and even palaces.

The brand is particularly known for its emphasis on customisation and material excellence. Clients can choose from over 30 finishes (including polished, satin, aged, or lacquered metals), as well as special materials such as glass, porcelain, and even semi-precious stones. Switches can be further customised with engraving, serigraphy (motifs, text, or logos), or Braille, while the hardware itself can be adapted in size, format, and toggle design to suit bespoke requirements. This flexibility allows Meljac to collaborate closely with architects, interior designers, and homeowners to deliver fittings that harmonise with the overall vision of a space.

Meljac's product range spans far beyond switches: it includes sockets, thermostats, home automation controls, LED downlights, and reading lights, each crafted with the same level of precision and attention to detail. By merging functionality, engineering, and artistry, the brand has established itself as the benchmark for high-end electrical fittings. Their work embodies a distinctly French aesthetic—both minimal and luxurious—rooted in traditional savoir-faire yet embracing modern innovations. This balance has made Meljac a go-to brand for projects where even the smallest details must reflect elegance and quality.

In the heart of Modena, Italy, a young blacksmith named Angelo Po opened his forge in 1922. He was more than just a craftsman; he was someone who saw kitchens not simply as places to cook, but as stages for ritual, for family, for artistry. His stoves heated more than food—they warmed rooms, dried laundry, carried the scent of life. Decades later, his descendants, moved by that legacy, imagined something new: bringing restaurant-grade performance into the home, without sacrificing style or luxury.

So in 1999 the Steel brand was born, born of the Po family's passion for steel, design, and uncompromising quality. Modeled on professional kitchens, every piece is crafted with precision, engineered for demanding cooking, yet also sculpted to delight the eye. Steel's kitchens, ovens, range cookers, and outdoor units tell stories of flame, of heat tempered by design, of stainless steel surfaces that reflect light and intention. The brand's soul is in that blend: performance married to beauty; tradition paired with innovation.

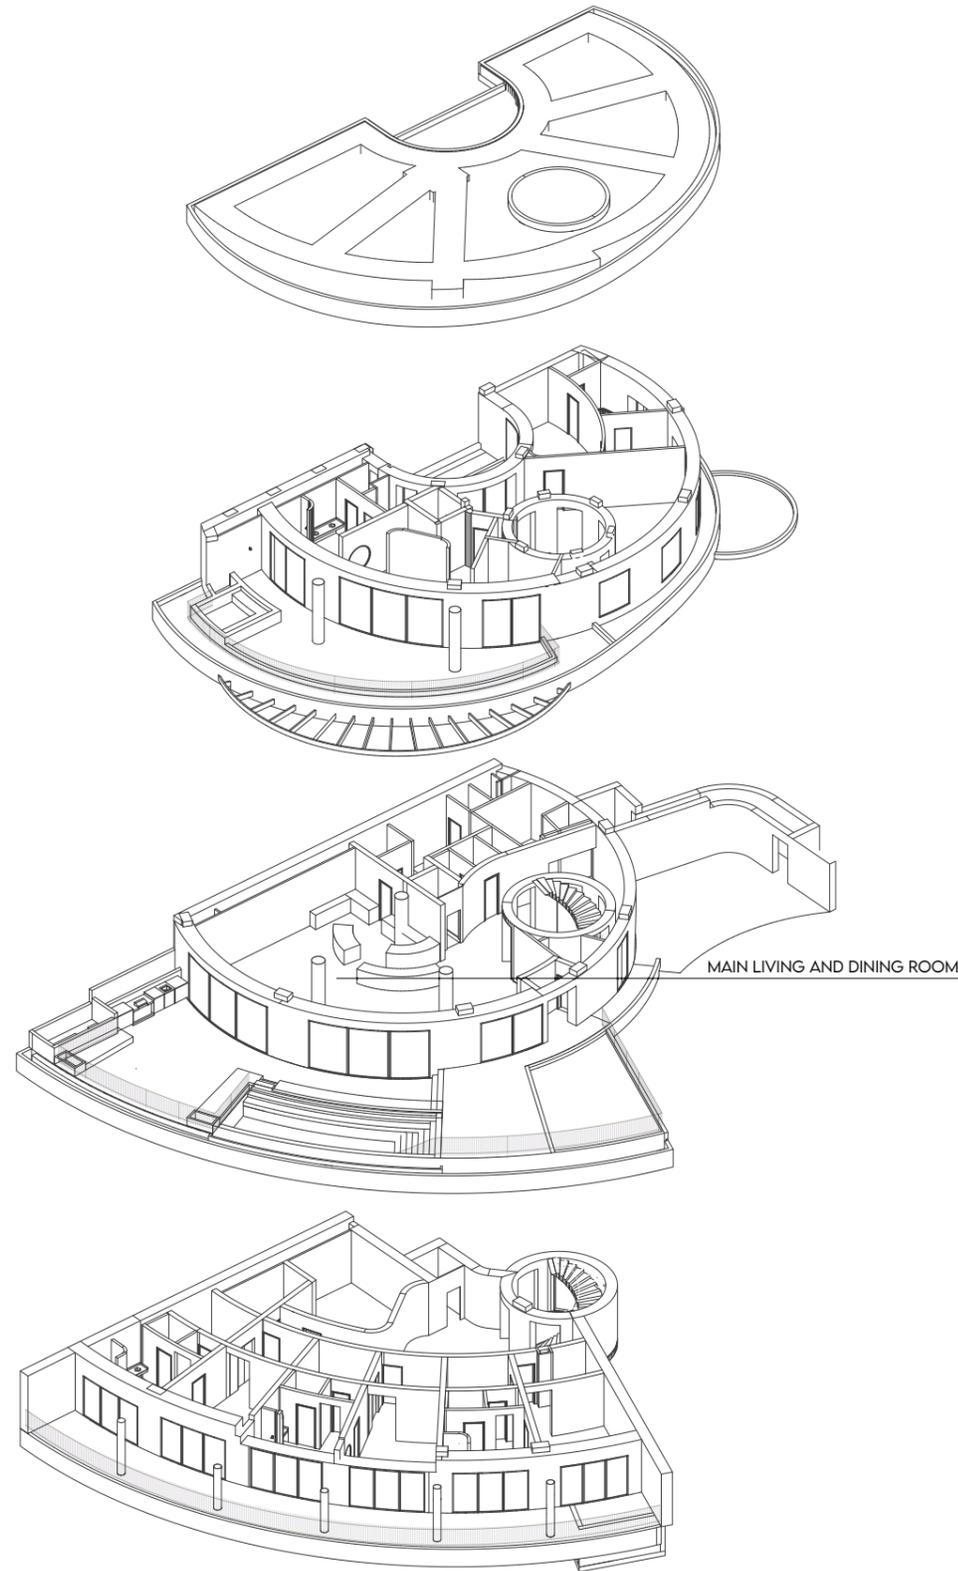

Today Steel stands at the crossroads of heritage and horizon. Four generations in, the company serves customers in over 50 countries, yet remains deeply Italian in its materials, its aesthetic, its DNA. They experiment with new technologies—steam ovens, efficient burners, minimized waste—all while keeping the kitchen's beating heart intact. What you get with a Steel Cucine appliance isn't just something that cooks well; it's something that inspires, that roots you in a tradition of craft and lets you reach toward tomorrow's possibilities.

- Freestanding range cookers & range stoves (domestic with professional performance)
- Ovens & multifunction ovens including steam-assisted models
- Cooktops / stovetops / brass burners and induction or mixed-fuel cooktops
- Outdoor kitchen solutions & BBQ / outdoor ranges
- Refrigerators / cooling modules integrated or standalone

LOEWE.

In 1923, two brothers, Siegmund and David Loewe, laid the foundations of a vision that would redefine the way people experience sound and picture. From their modest Berlin workshop emerged one of Europe's first names in electronic innovation — a brand that saw the television not just as a device, but as a window to wonder. As the world entered the age of broadcast, Loewe stood at the forefront, blending German engineering precision with a deep respect for timeless design.

Through decades of evolution, Loewe has never lost sight of its guiding philosophy: technology should feel effortless, elegant, and human. Each product is meticulously crafted in Kronach, Germany, where engineers and designers work side by side to achieve perfect harmony between form and function. Sleek aluminum frames, rich acoustic detail, and intuitive interfaces transform every viewing experience into something quietly extraordinary.

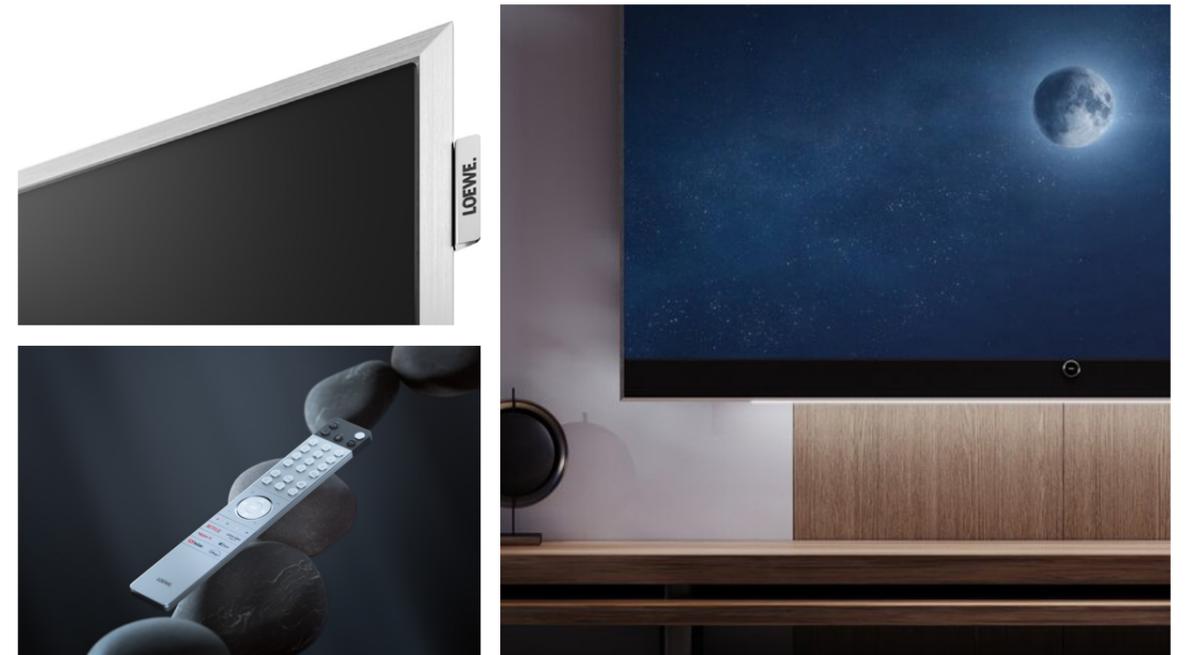

Today, Loewe continues to shape the future of home entertainment. It stands as a symbol of heritage meeting innovation — a brand for those who value both craftsmanship and clarity. To own a Loewe product is to invite artistry into everyday life; to rediscover the beauty of sound and vision perfected through a century of dedication.

- Televisions – Premium OLED and LED TVs with minimalist design and advanced image processing
- Sound Systems – Wireless speakers, multiroom audio setups, and integrated soundbars.
- Home Cinema Solutions – Custom entertainment systems and surround sound experiences.
- Streaming & Smart Technology – Smart TVs and connected devices with intuitive Loewe OS platforms.
- Accessories – Elegant stands, mounts, and remote controls crafted to complement each product.

From the moment RedPill Audio first spoke into the world, it felt like a call to awaken ears—to shake off the muffled, filtered, digital shadows that too often mask music’s true colours. It wasn’t enough for their founders to deliver sound; they wanted truth. The idea: restore purity in audio signal paths so that what the artist dreamed, the listener hears. It’s a journey not just of engineering, but of faith—in tone, in resonance, in that spark of emotion when a note lands exactly as it was meant to.

They build this vision into every facet of their design. Using “proprietary” technologies—Frequency Accelerating Technology (for clarity across frequencies), ultra-low distortion signal chains, premium materials like 24-carat gold contacts, high-grade cables—all of it tuned so that nothing stands between you and the music. It’s less about flashy marketing and more about crafting what they describe as “signal integrity.” The goal is to evoke the sensation that you’re there with the performer—every nuance, whisper, crescendo intact.

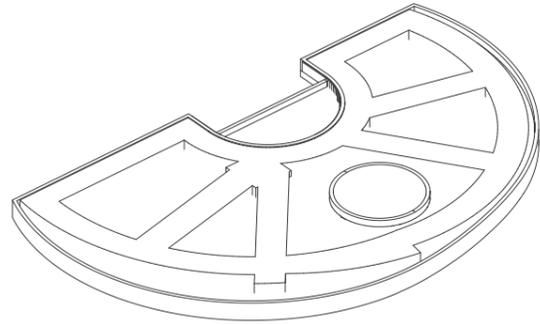

But RedPill’s ambition stretches beyond just gear. They promise an immersive, multisensory experience: sound that you can feel, clarity that pulls you in. It’s about reclaiming what often gets lost in compression, in wires, in mediocre components. They position themselves as more than an audio brand: they’re storytellers in waveform, restorers of detail, listeners’ allies. The idea is to blur the line between recording and performance, so that when you close your eyes, you don’t need to imagine.

- Proprietary patented technologies aimed at preserving audio fidelity
- Very low-distortion signal delivery chains
- Use of premium materials (gold contacts, high-quality copper / oxygen-free copper cables)
- Ultra-wide, full-frequency response, updated via DSP (digital signal processing)
- Enhanced sound staging and clarity: making music feel more “real,” with more detail

Studio/ ORE ORE

Studio Ore was founded by Daniel Lee out of a personal desire to bring raw brass, material honesty, and warmth into bathroom fittings. Frustrated by overly polished chrome and artificial aging, his inspiration came during a renovation of his own home in 2014, where he envisioned taps in unlacquered brass—a “living finish” that would evolve over time. When he couldn’t find anything fitting that vision, he designed his own, and from there Studio Ore was born.

The brand places a strong emphasis on craftsmanship, premium materials, and small-batch manufacture. Their products are made from solid brass, engineered to high standards, and hand-finished rather than mass produced. They offer a variety of finishes—unlacquered brass (which develops natural patina), lacquers, waxes, painted/enamel finishes, and other aged or oxidised effects.

Studio Ore’s product range covers taps, showers, shower roses & arms, diverters, fittings for basins, baths, kitchens etc. It is particularly known for industrial-inspired designs that do not look like traditional polished bathroom hardware. They organise their collections into “chapters” (e.g. their “Signature Design”, “Revisiting Tradition”, “Modern Simplicity”) which each explore different design ideals. They also pay attention to sustainability: using recycled materials where possible, keeping packaging minimal, ensuring parts are recyclable, and offering finishes that are more environmentally sensitive.

Maison Volevatch was founded in 1975 by Serge Volevatch, a craftsman with a fascination for antique bathroom hardware and decorative arts. He initially restored old bathtubs, faucets and fittings that he found in flea markets, developing a deep encyclopedic knowledge of historic styles. Over time he started designing his own collections, inspired by these period pieces, while preserving and reviving traditional French metal-working techniques such as sculpting, chiselling, chasing, polishing, casting and engraving. Maison Volevatch operates its own ateliers in France, and has been formally recognised for its craftsmanship (e.g. Entreprise du Patrimoine Vivant) and contribution to rare artisanal trades.

Their aesthetic combines historic elegance with rich materials and finishes. Collections often draw from classical, baroque, art deco, or turn-of-century French design, but with their own reinterpretation: ornate bezels, cross handles, curved spouts, decorative motifs etc. At the same time, there are collections with a more contemporary or geometric sensibility. The brand makes extensive use of high-end finishes (polished or matt nickel, antique bronze, unlacquered brass, silver, gold, copper etc.), and offers handcrafted details and customisation.

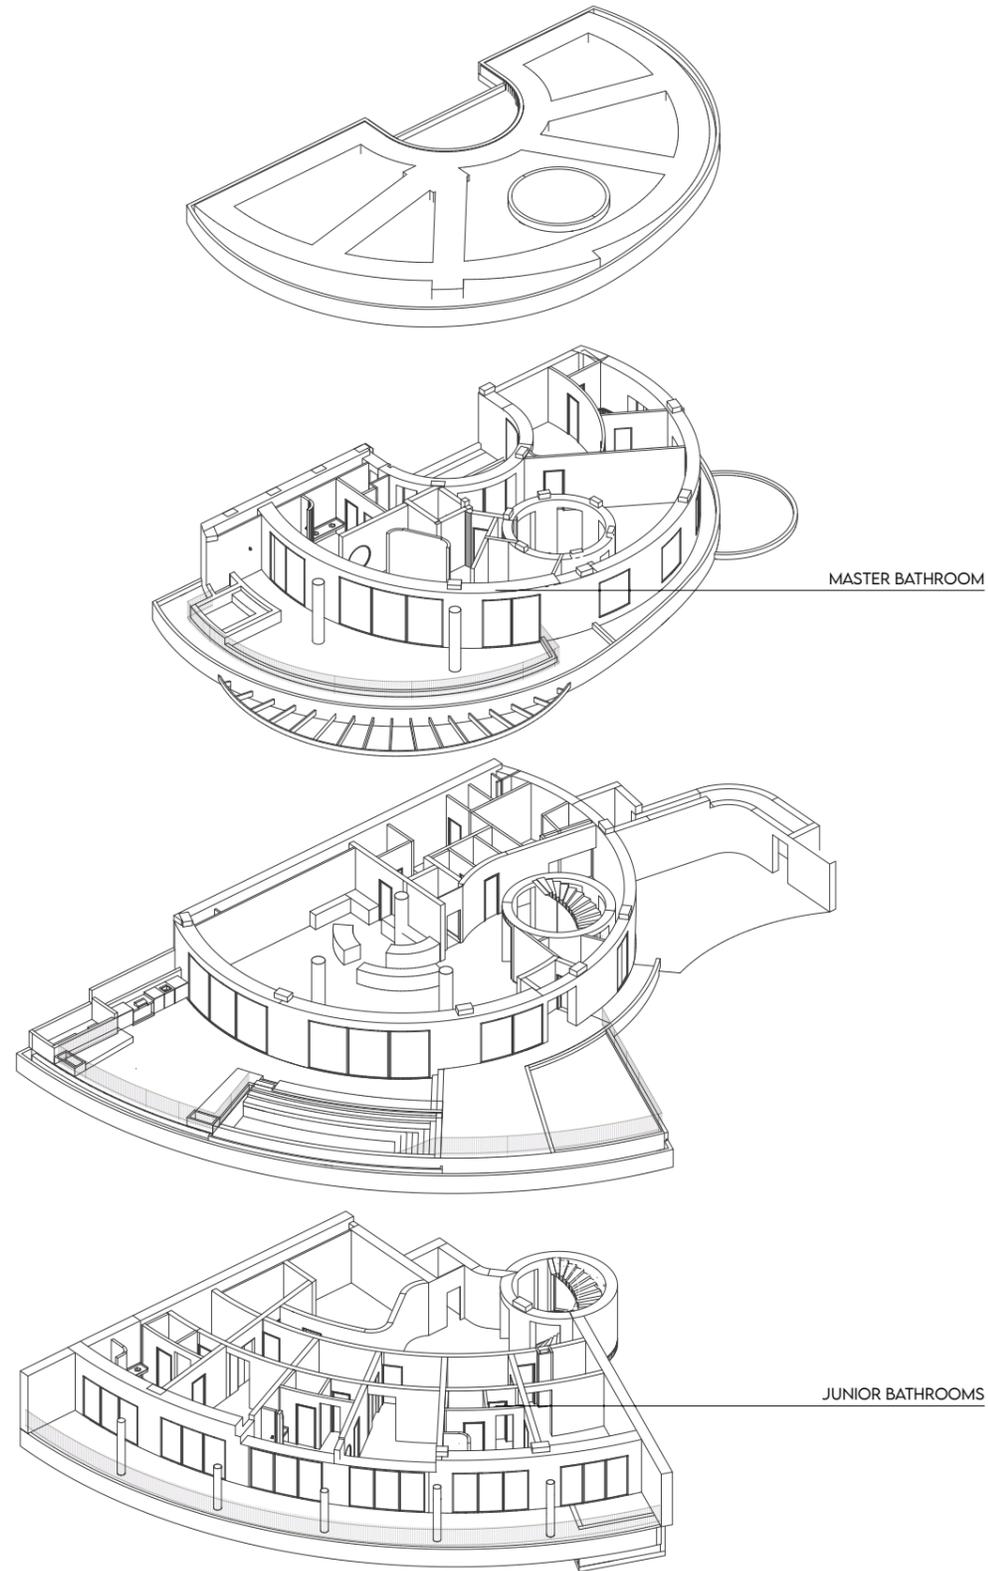

Functionally, Volevatch is more than decorative hardware—they produce complete solutions for bathrooms and kitchens that combine utility and luxury. Their range includes taps, showers, basins, radiators and towel warmers, bathroom furniture, accessories, and sometimes bespoke or limited-edition series (e.g. Versailles, Birds of Paradise, Jaipur) for special projects. Products are made to high technical standards, and their workshops ensure both artisan craftsmanship and modern production rigour.

TOTO

More than a century ago in Japan, Kazuchika Okura imagined a future where modern sanitation could transform people's daily lives. At the time, Western-style flush toilets were virtually unknown in the country, and hygiene standards were modest. In 1917 he founded what would become TOTO, not just to manufacture ceramics, but to introduce a new way of living: one where technology, cleanliness, and design elevated the most private of spaces. His vision was ambitious — to marry Japanese attention to ritual and purity with cutting-edge innovation.

Over the decades, TOTO grew into a brand synonymous with refinement in the bathroom. Its engineers didn't simply design fixtures; they rethought the very act of washing, bathing, and cleansing. From sleek basins that stay spotless thanks to advanced coatings, to showers that conserve water without compromising comfort, every product carried a quiet philosophy: true luxury lies in both function and feeling. Nowhere is this more evident than in the iconic Washlet, a seat that transformed toilets into intelligent, comforting companions — warming, cleansing, and refreshing with a precision that reflects Japanese respect for harmony and ritual.

Today, TOTO stands as a global ambassador of that original dream. Its bathrooms can be found in homes, hotels, and public spaces around the world, always carrying with them the same understated promise: to make daily routines feel thoughtful, elegant, and humane. The brand's story is not only about ceramics and engineering, but about creating small rituals of well-being. In TOTO's world, even the simplest act — turning a tap, sitting on a toilet, stepping into a bath — is elevated into an experience that balances innovation, comfort, and care for the environment.
