

The background of the entire page is a photograph of a row of multi-story townhouses, likely in a city like New York. The image is heavily filtered with a dark blue color, making the details of the buildings and the street in front of them somewhat muted. The townhouses have multiple windows, some with small balconies, and a sidewalk runs along the front of the row.

The New York City townhouse market in 2025 was defined by a 17.1% increase in sales year over year, accompanied by a rise in median and average prices of 7.5% and 3.5%, respectively.

In Manhattan, the Upper East Side led with 48 closings, a 29.7% increase, followed by Downtown with 44 closings and 25.7% growth. Despite this growth in closed sales and pricing, the average price per square foot remained largely unchanged. Signed contract activity was more subdued, finishing just 0.7% higher than in 2024. This divergence between sales and contracts is likely linked to supply constraints, as inventory slumped further with limited new listings coming to market in the second half of the year.

Across the river in Brooklyn, Park Slope recorded 94 closings (up 30.6%), along with an increased average price to more than $4M. Williamsburg and Fort Greene followed, both with 33 sales, up 43.5% and 22.2%, respectively, and double-digit price growth. However, the momentum was not universal; Greenpoint experienced a 16.1% decline in sales, and while Brooklyn Heights saw significant price appreciation, the number of closings decreased. Brooklyn Heights commanded the highest prices, with an average price per square foot of $1,743, the highest end-of-year value on record.
