After half a decade, one of the legendary Chicago Bulls is returning to Chicagoland property ownership.

Hall of Fame small forward and six-time NBA Champion Scottie Pippen snagged a Streeterville condo for $2 million.

Pippen, who most recently sold a 10,500-square-foot Highland Park mansion for $1.8 million in 2021, has a long list of Chicago area real estate transactions, according to the Chicago Tribune. Pippen bought a separate mansion in Highland Park for $1.5 million in 1993. He offloaded that 8,230-square-foot home in 1996.

That same year, he dropped $850,000 on a 21st floor condo on Lake Shore Drive in the Gold Coast. Pippen sold that condo in 2006. Finally, he bought 10 acres in Lake Forest for $1.8 million in 1998 before selling them to a developer.

Pippen's sale of the Highland Park mansion took years as well as multiple price cuts. It first went on the market a decade ago in 2016 at just under $3.1 million. Over time, the asking price was whittled down to under $2 million.

The Bulls legend also tried marketing stunts to increase notoriety of the house. He put the home up for rent on AirBnB for $92 a night, a nod to his '92 Olympic gold medal, in the lead up to the Tokyo Olympics.

Pippen's new digs are more humble than the mansion with an indoor basketball court. The Streeterville condo features four bathrooms, a wine tower, a primary bathroom with heated floors and a freestanding soaking tub, according to the outlet.

Eli Masud, a real estate agent with Compass, is on a roll with athlete deals in the Chicago area. He represented Pippen in the $2 million Streeterville condo purchase and a much younger Bull, rookie Dailyn Swain, in leasing a River North apartment. He also found a home in Long Grove for Bears tight end Colston Loveland and the sale of home in Indian Head Park for Fire defender Rafael Czichos.
